Dear Edwin,

First of all, thank you so much for your patience! It's been over a year since you kindly participated in our study. What began as a single study has grown into a broader project with several additional studies, which explains the delay. Together with your contribution and those of other participants, we believe this research has real potential to shed light on how individuals experience censorship.

Dear Andrew, Julia, and Natasha,

Thank you for sharing the draft of your study and for your thoughtful work on this important topic. I congratulate you all on this comprehensive and impactful research! Having read the manuscript (with the help of a Dutch translation via DeepL), I recognize many of the points you describe, and I confirm that my quote regarding the chilling effect of censorship is accurately represented.

It was particularly striking to read that six of the seven interviewed authors live in exile. I still reside in the Netherlands, in the heart of The Hague,

Thank you again for your meaningful work and for including my contribution. I look forward to seeing the final publication.

Warm regards,
Edwin Giltay

P.S. Have you considered writing a popular book based on your research findings?
